Course Objectives: This course offers students and overview of politics in the Middle East. It also teaches some basic tools about comparing and contrasting the politics of rather diverse countries in a region in the midst of conflicts and turmoil. As such, we will compare and contrast different forms of governance, socioeconomic policies, and modes of political expression, repression, resistance, exclusion, cooperation and conflict. The course will also deal with a number of core dynamics that have been prominent in the region in the past few decades such as the rise of religious ideologies and tensions associated with religious revival, activism and violence, impact of changing demography and gender roles, the imposition of neo-liberal economic policies, political challenges posed by the reliance of some economies to oil exports and dependence of others on external support, and the impact of the Palestinian-Israeli conflict as well as repeated armed interventions and conflicts in the region.

Text: Michele Penner Angrist, Politics and Society in the Contemporary Middle East, Second Edition Paperback (Boulder: Lynne Rienner Publishers, 2013) Additional readings can be accessed electronically, either online or through Laulima. You are also encouraged to check some of the Middle East dedicated websites, some of which are listed below, to keep up with fast changing dynamics of the region. Below are also links to several newspapers and news agencies producing news in English in various Middle Eastern Countries. Following the news and commentary for a particular country will help you in the assignment due on the last day of the class. As is the case for all courses, you will get more out of this course if you read more.

Grades: Course works include one quiz, one short assignment (4-5 pages), a take-home midterm exam, and an in-class final exam. Details of each of these will be described in class. The quiz will count as 10 percent of your grade. The best two of your three other grades will each count for 30% of your final grade; the worst will count for 20%.

The final 10% of your grade will be determined by your class attendance and participation, which can be through input in class discussions or direct conversation with me in person or via email. You are expected to come to class prepared to discuss the reading material assigned for the day.

Exams will consist of essay questions. I will allow exams outside the slotted time only under exceptional circumstances and only with prior permission. Late assignments will face a grade deduction.
